Zarathustra

Nicholas Jagger

'Jagger's poem takes the plunge with Nietzsche into our all-too-human abyss, addressing the Nietzschean project of self-overcoming in full awareness that, as Wordsworth puts it, "words are too awful an instrument for good and evil to be trifled with". Jagger's Zarathustra asserts the ethics of speech in the strong act of speaking through its masks.'

Forms of Enlightenment in Art

B. R. Nelson

This book offers a new approach to our understanding of art as a form of knowledge. It presents a theory of art as the portrayal of reflective life in action, by reference to works by Sophocles, Shakespeare, Bach, Beethoven, Turner and Cézanne. Reflective life is defined as a life that is valued in itself, and interpretations of twenty-seven works of art explore the meaning and significance of each complete work as a representation of life.

The City is served Bartholomew! To the American Prison Selected Novellas and Stories 1996 - 2009: A Compendium

William Alexander Patterson

The American Prison—the signet New Journalism essay in this compendium—goes beyond that form. It concerns the constraining aspects of society and culture in America. Mr. Patterson writes as a passionate ex-patriot. This signet extended essay is a jaw-dropping combination of passion, free association structure, advanced grammar and terminology, metaphor, analysis, and focus. He addresses a bigger culture and hierarchy, writing with such passion, poetry and structure as to make this just one of the exceptionalities of this work, and indeed this book. I think that this all amounts to a ponderance worthy of your time.
